

Faith-Filled Generosity 2022 Stewardship Campaign

“People who have discovered generosity have come to understand God as a God of abundance. They have not bought into the idea that there isn’t enough, but rather they believe that what they have is a gift and the gift should be shared. It is through their witness that culture begins to change in congregations. It lets others know that it is okay to struggle with generosity and it is okay to try and fail. As we witness to our giving, we help others discover the ways in which they can be generous and live to reflect the abundance that God has given us.” (Abundance by Rev. Mike Ward)

Here are some thoughts from your Council leaders responding to the question: How does your faith impact or direct your generosity, both at St. Peter and in the world?

My faith guides my giving be it my time, my talents or financially. Jesus calls us to love and be kind go one another. I know when others are generous with kindness, be that in acts of service, donating to help my kids’ organizations they are involved in, or sharing their time with me, I am reminded that we are loved. My generosity is to show my love to others.
-Megan Culler

Giving and helping out for different organizations and fundraising throughout the year. Trying to do that neighborly thing and help out. Just being nice to people in general.
-A Council Member

I try to have my faith assist with people who are affected by natural and unnatural disasters. I find that I like to help with people I do not know but are in need of help.
-A Council member

Generosity is not practiced solely for the benefit of our church. God calls us to live generous lives inside and outside our church’s walls. How does your faith guide you to be generous in the world?

Faith-Filled Generosity 2022 Stewardship Campaign

“People who have discovered generosity have come to understand God as a God of abundance. They have not bought into the idea that there isn’t enough, but rather they believe that what they have is a gift and the gift should be shared. It is through their witness that culture begins to change in congregations. It lets others know that it is okay to struggle with generosity and it is okay to try and fail. As we witness to our giving, we help others discover the ways in which they can be generous and live to reflect the abundance that God has given us.” (Abundance by Rev. Mike Ward)

Here are some thoughts from your Council leaders responding to the question: How does your faith impact or direct your generosity, both at St. Peter and in the world?

My faith guides my giving be it my time, my talents or financially. Jesus calls us to love and be kind go one another. I know when others are generous with kindness, be that in acts of service, donating to help my kids’ organizations they are involved in, or sharing their time with me, I am reminded that we are loved. My generosity is to show my love to others.
-Megan Culler

Giving and helping out for different organizations and fundraising throughout the year. Trying to do that neighborly thing and help out. Just being nice to people in general.
-A Council Member

I try to have my faith assist with people who are affected by natural and unnatural disasters. I find that I like to help with people I do not know but are in need of help.
-A Council member

Generosity is not practiced solely for the benefit of our church. God calls us to live generous lives inside and outside our church’s walls. How does your faith guide you to be generous in the world?